

I totally endorse the arrl's proposal for restructuring, but I believe there should be a plan to totally phase code out of the amateur testing area by 2045. I'm a Technician Class and I know that for amateur radio to survive, it has to be easier to get in than it is now. Change is the essence of the universe, and amateur radio is no exception. For it to survive, it has to evolve past the bitter, older hams who are scared to death that the bands will become like the cb band. That was predicted when the Technician Class was created but never came to pass. This ham endorses the ARRL's recommended restructuring. Thanks for your attention.
